Trauma Informed Approach to Working with Victims

Prosecutors are required to uphold victims' constitutional rights. This cannot be accomplished without awareness, understanding and practice of trauma-informed care. The support victims receive throughout the justice process helps prevent future violence and hold offenders accountable. The physical, emotional, and financial pain cascades from individuals to their families and communities. Preventing one form of violence may potentially prevent other forms of violence. Inclusion in the process helps victims to feel empowered and restores balance in their lives. Receiving up to date information about the offender's status and being kept informed is critical to victim safety and minimizing the trauma experienced.

Prosecutors work with victims who have experienced a series of traumas throughout their lives. It is essential to break down misunderstandings and dispel misguided beliefs about how victims should react or respond to trauma. Participants will learn how to recognize the signs and symptoms of trauma and how to integrate that knowledge into the practice of trauma-informed care. Participants will learn ways to prevent secondary victimization by the justice system.

Learning Litigation Skills From “Where the Crawdads Sing”

Where the Crawdads Sing is a novel that has sold over 15 million copies and has been created into a best-selling movie. In this murder mystery Catherine "Kya" Clark is accused of murdering Chase Andrews after their relationship ended. We will examine the trial by reviewing clips of this movie and discussing the trial tactics by the prosecutor and defense. We will determine whether a motion to suppress would have been successful in this case. We will learn litigation skills by reviewing the opening and closing arguments, the direct and the cross-examination of various witnesses and the alibi defense. Finally, attendees will examine why Kya did not report a sexual assault to the police and whether this failure to report is common in today's society. The goal of this program is for prosecutors to learn litigation skills while discussing this amazing story.

Local Government Incentives Available Under the Inflation Reduction Act

Federal energy policy is making many new incentives available for local governments to fund energy-related assets. The Inflation Reduction Act (“IRA”) established a set of energy-related asset categories that are now being directly subsidized by the federal government. Under the IRA, any advanced or renewable energy asset constructed by a local government is eligible for some kind of federal cash subsidy. Local governments are not taxpayers and historically have not been able to benefit from tax credits, but the IRA authorizes direct pay tax credits as cash subsidies to local governments to fund energy-related assets. Throughout the course of this presentation, we will explain how counties, townships, municipalities, and school districts can build and own long-term energy-producing assets like solar fields, install geothermal heating, or invest in clean fuel buses for their vehicle fleets, all with federal support.

2023 Update on Understanding Construction Procurement for Counties

Participants will be able to gain an understanding of the various delivery models available for county projects. When preparing for a construction project, one of the first decisions that must be made is whether to use a general contractor, construction manager at risk, or design-build delivery model. We will provide an overview of the construction procurement process for counties, including design professional procurement, competitive bidding, and procurement of construction managers at risk and design-builders. We will describe the standard of award and contracting process for each project delivery model. Additionally, we will compare the pros and cons of these delivery models, including how each relates to the project owner's schedule and budget, how each model allocates risk, and the primary decision points within each model. This presentation will also identify and explain exceptions to competitive bidding available to counties.

Issues to be discussed include: whether an evidentiary hearing is even required for the motion; what evidence is admissible at the hearing; who has the burden of proof and on what issues; ensuring that issues are preserved for future appeal; and determining when it is advisable to request post-hearing briefing.

Understanding Permissible Responses to the Actions of the Public and Off-Duty Conduct of Employees

The general public and public employees continue to push the envelope of what is permissible with respect to their conduct and behaviors. For example, it is becoming more prevalent that counties are faced with responding to citizens conducting "audits" of public facilities and expressing their dissatisfaction on social media. Additionally, employees continue to engage in behaviors off-duty that tend discredit public agencies. Responding to the behaviors and comments of the public on county property and regulating the off-duty behaviors of public employees are not without the risk of fallout.

This session will address concerns and considerations for public officials when responding to the actions of the public and employees.
