Marsy's Law in Juvenile Court: Navigating Victims' Rights and Restitution Challenges

This session will provide Ohio juvenile county prosecutors with a comprehensive overview of Marsy's Law as it interacts with the juvenile justice system. Attendees will examine the constitutional rights afforded to victims under Marsy's Law, including the right to restitution, and how these rights affect the rehabilitative focus of juvenile court proceedings. Topics include the factors that go into the determination of restitution amounts, notice requirements for victims of juvenile delinquency, and victim impact statements in juvenile proceedings. The session will cover recent case law, the Marsy's Law statutory implementation, and best practices for prosecutors in juvenile proceedings. Assessment of Youth who Sexually Offend

Assessing youth who sexually offend requires a comprehensive and multifaceted approach. It involves evaluating not only the specific sexual behavior but also the broader developmental, social, and contextual factors that may contribute to the behavior. This includes assessing criminogenic risks, trauma history, mental health, and the youth's perception of the situation, alongside reviewing official reports and collateral information. This workshop will look at relevant research as well as assessment instruments used when interviewing the juvenile sexual offender and how it corresponds to the juvenile county prosecutor's tasks when dealing with these cases.

Cell Phone Evidence – What all the Kids are “Talking?” About

In 2025, one of the most abundant locations for evidence is the cell phone. Items like texts, app data, payment platforms and digital media are all great sources of information for prosecutors. However, it does not stop there as we can also obtain data from the records and clouds to make an even stronger case. We'll look at what records can be obtained and how to go about getting those records to help with juvenile prosecutions and victims of crime.
